NEW EUROPEAN HEAD FOR WOODS BAGOT EDUCATION AND SCIENCE SECTOR

Global architectural firm Woods Bagot today announced the appointment of Cathy Stewart as the new head of its Education and Science Sector for Europe.

As a former Director at Pascall & Watson architects, Cathy brings with her a wealth of experience. Her remarkable career includes major extensions to terminal one at Manchester Airport and Heathrow; fittingly 21st Century laboratory projects at the London Metropolitan University's science centre and London's Imperial College; an award winning design for De Montfort University; as well as the completion phase of the new British Library, Euston.

Cathy is also the current 'past chairman' of Women in Property, during a prominent year for the organisation, which is celebrating its 20th birthday. Alongside this role she has been invited to judge the newcomer of the year category at this year's prestigious Building awards.

Cathy comments: "Woods Bagot has an impressive global education and science portfolio, which puts the company in a great position to track world wide trends and innovations throughout the sector. As a significant area of growth for the company within Europe, this is a prominent role with an extremely forward thinking organisation. I'm looking forward to the challenges ahead!"

David Tregoning, Director at Woods Bagot, comments: "Our education and science sector across the Group continues to go from strength to strength. Cathy's vast experience and excellent reputation made her a natural choice for the role.

"As an exceptional architectural innovator in this field and a significant figure within the property industry as a whole, it is clear that she will be a catalyst for further developing the Woods Bagot profile within the education sector across Europe. Her vision and capabilities will undoubtedly spearhead the team's future success."
